Often considered a “stars and stripes” recipe, in fact hamburgers are much older than we might think, and the first recipes date back to the early 19th century, much earlier than the invention of fast food. Hamburgers were meatballs made of beef, found commonly in the city and port of Hamburg. This typical dish was taken to North America by the many German immigrants.

The extra-large version of our hamburger, made with the finest meats. For perfect cooking, leave the meat at room temperature for 10 minutes before grilling, so that it will cook uniformly all the way through. But don't pierce our succulent hamburger with a fork, because this could let out the precious juices during the cooking.
